Adjusting organizational leadership in a changing world is not new

BEACONSFIELD, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, May 26, 2021—In a rapidly changing world, organizational leadership is under stress. How can we best navigate staff and those we serve? How can we maintain a healthy balance in which our families thrive? In his latest book, Leadership & Me: Wisdom and Life Lessons of a World Vision Australia CEO, Philip Hunt, describes how he not only led through transformation, but made World Vision Australia the largest not-for-profit organization in Australia affecting even national politics.

“Hunt’s insights will be of benefit to anyone who is involved in leadership of an organisation, particularly a faith-based organisation, and is keen to learn from someone who’s been there.” – Editorial Review in Sight Magazine by David Adams.

“This book, Leadership & Me, is considered a must read for every current and aspiring CEO.” – Ian Allsop, BA, BD, MBA, PhD—Past Senior Fellow, Melbourne Business School, Past Federal Secretary Churches of Christ in Australia

Technological advance, a global pandemic, societal uproar and complicating international relations demand strong and agile leadership. Wisdom is required to best help people in their work, their lives and their relationships. Family relations are under pressure as work demands increase. In this leadership memoir, Philip Hunt shares from his wisdom and experience on how to hold fast onto the mission of the organization and thrive, but also how to be there for his growing family.
